The eternal Queen of Pop took a bite out of the Big Apple Sunday night.

Madonna was spotted dining with “Ozark” actress Julia Garner — who was slated to play the musical icon in a now-shelved biopic — among others to celebrate photographer Steven Klein’s birthday at Journey in the Flatiron District.

The group had the entire restaurant to themselves around 10 p.m. and enjoyed the hot spot’s 360 room, where guests eat in a virtual zeppelin that travels over NYC, through volcanoes, underwater and into outer space by way of “floor-to-ceiling and tabletop 360 projection mapping.”

Photos exclusively obtained by The Post also showed Madonna, Garner and friends enjoying wine, cocktails and hors d’oeuvres on leather couches in the lounge area.

Madonna, 64, was sporting orange hair and a pair of dark-colored gloves, and she posed with platinum-blond Garner, 29, eating what appeared to be french fries.

On a break from grueling rehearsals for her much anticipated, global “Celebration Tour,” the “Hung Up” icon looked quite different than the often-filtered Instagram version of herself. She also appeared unbothered by the ongoing social media speculation over her always evolving look.
